

“Advancing business and human rights globally: alignment, adherence and accountability”

DRAFT PROGRAMME (27 November 2014)

Introduction

The Third Annual United Nations Forum on Business and Human Rights will take place from 1 to 3 December in Geneva, Switzerland. Pursuant to Human Rights Council resolutions 17/4 and 26/22, the Forum seeks to promote dialogue and cooperation on issues linked to business and human rights. It will discuss trends and challenges in the implementation of the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights: Implementing the United Nations “Protect, Respect and Remedy” Framework (“Guiding Principles”), including challenges faced in particular sectors, operational environments or in relation to specific rights or groups, as well as identify good practices.

Context

The business and human rights agenda does not exist in a vacuum, but is continuously reshaped by global currents. The 2014 Forum is held at a time of urgent international security and health emergencies as well as critical structural challenges. These include climate change, decimation of eco-systems, global economic slow-down, youth unemployment, broken trust in the financial system, and domestic political tensions across regions. Central to several current global crises is the failure of States to ensure proper protection and respect for human rights. Another backdrop in a changing global landscape is the rising power and roles of corporations in society. Upholding human rights in the context of economic activity is at the heart of calls for scaling up responsible business practice, and understanding the roles and responsibilities of companies in this new context is one of the most significant challenges for global policymakers at the beginning of the 21st century. The Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights were designed precisely to address global governance gaps characterized by the lack of Government capacity or will to protect human rights and the increased reach and impact of corporations. They represent the first globally acknowledged framework to clarify the respective duties and responsibilities of Governments and business to prevent, mitigate and remedy adverse human rights impacts of business operations. Since their endorsement by the United Nations in 2011, they have been gaining ground. However, implementation by States and business remains patchy and has not yet reached scale. Wider and more effective uptake would contribute to better governance and equitable growth through upholding human dignity, respect for rights in the workplace and better business-community relationships. There are increasing calls for States and business to step up action, including for States to negotiate a legally binding instrument. Amid the constantly changing landscape of global governance challenges, it is critical to identify the most effective ways for ensuring alignment, adherence and accountability.

The 2014 Annual Forum

“Advancing business and human rights globally: alignment, adherence and accountability” is the theme of the 2014 Forum. Under the leadership of the United Nations Working Group on the issue of human rights and transnational corporations and other business enterprises (“Working Group on Business and Human Rights”), the Forum will examine key strategic issues informed by the current business and human rights agenda and the wider global context. High-level discussions will provide leadership perspectives on the business and human rights agenda in the context of current global trends, and on how the Guiding Principles can reach scale and contribute to human rights and dignity for all in the global economy. The thematic tracks will allow participants to delve into substantive areas such as: the role of public policy and national action plans; challenges faced and progress made by companies in integrating the corporate responsibility to respect human rights both in policy and practice; ways to enhance accountability and access to effective remedy for victims of business-related human rights abuse; the integration of the Guiding Principles in global governance structures; and good practice models for meaningful stakeholder engagement. In addition, a number of parallel sessions will address a range of key trends and issues related to specific rights, groups, sectors or operational contexts.

Discussions at the Forum will build on previous annual and regional Forums, including the recent African Regional Forum on Business and Human Rights, convened by the Working Group in collaboration with the African Union and the United Nations Economic Commission for Africa in September 2014. This event examined issues such as responsible investment in natural resources and land, and ways to overcome governance gaps and advance the Guiding Principles in a regional context, including through national action plans. Cross-cutting and strategic considerations for the Forum are the importance of multi-stakeholder dialogue and carving out a common vision for the way forward for the global business and human rights regime, with the Guiding Principles as a common baseline in a rapidly evolving field.

Format

The Annual Forum is a multi-stakeholder event under the guidance of the United Nations Working Group. Its programme comprises high-level plenary sessions and parallel sessions that are led by the Working Group and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR). The programme also includes a number of other parallel sessions that are being organized by external stakeholders. The Forum Secretariat has sought to accommodate as many requests for externally-organized parallel events as possible in line with the inclusive nature of the Forum. Some events may also be held on 4 December. Please check the web page for information about parallel events. The Working Group and OHCHR are not responsible for the content and organization of these externally-organized sessions. Audience participation will be possible in most sessions, and will vary according to the session design and the discretion of moderators, with a view to ensuring multi-stakeholder engagement in discussions. UN organized sessions will have interpretation in English, French and Spanish. The opening and closing plenary sessions will also include Arabic, Chinese and Russian interpretation. Interpretation in other sessions is subject to arrangements made by the external organizers.
